The number one best-selling author of "The Amy Binegar-Kimmes-Lyle Book Of Failures" brings you her newest gem, "We're All A Mess. It's OK." Over one hundred contributors share their failures, setbacks, and most embarrassing moments in this compilation with the hope that their stories will give their fellow embarrassed and struggling souls some comic relief... and maybe even some inspiration.

Life is riddled with embarrassments, disappointments, and failures, but given enough time (and perhaps, Chardonnay), those experiences can be seen for the folly they are. "We're All A Mess. It's OK" captures life's more absurd moments honestly and without filter. Its (very) personal essays highlight the grainier sides of being human and imperfect.

The book covers everything from horrible internet dating experiences, the strangest of co-workers, and vacations that went array, to the worst holiday gifts of all time. It's an anthology of the mini human disasters we all have but never share with strangers.

You'll enjoy comedian/actor Kim Banta's tale, "My First Date and a Sluggish Toilet." Kim details a first date in the nicest house in town (albeit one with sadly inadequate plumbing), which ended with an overflowing toilet and the panicked stashing of poo in her purse.

Also...

"You Must Have Me Confused with Someone Else" depicts Dane Levent's distress over the total craziness of her golden retriever, Buddy, after being picked up from boarding...only to discover a week later that she had the wrong dog.

And...

"He's Worth the Wait" by Bes. D details her mother-in-law's passionate, long-term relationship with a great guy she had met online...at Meet-An-Inmate.com, to be specific.

Further...

"Saying 'I'm Sorry' Will Not Fix This Situation" by Ashley P. recounts the collapse (no pun intended) of her best date into the worst ever when she leapt into her partner's lap, causing what is called, in medical terminology, a penile fracture.

There's more...

Follow the scarlet rise of Traci Jo's blush as she relates her daily embarrassment when her mother picked her up from school sporting a "wig-of-the-day," "The Dorothy Hamill" perhaps, or "The Marilyn Monroe."

And...

Read an entire chapter dedicated to unusual compulsions, such as Shelley Miner Gardler's need to gather her pets before she goes to work to tell them goodbye and to assign one to be in charge while she's away.

Not to be outdone...

Discover why Christine T sorts M&Ms in ROYGBIV order and eats them first by frequency until they're even, and then one of each color, in order, until they're gone.

And this is just touching the surface.

"We're All A Mess. It's OK" reads like "Chicken Soup for the Soul" with a big old dose of snark and expletives.
